CISA marks 100 years of innovation and launches its Centenary campaign

Faenza, January 2026 – In 2026, CISA marks one hundred years of history and leadership in the security sector with a message firmly oriented toward the future. Founded in 1926—the same year Luigi Bucci patented the first electrically controlled lock—CISA introduced a new way of approaching access control, laying the foundations of modern security. Since then, the company has built a century of expertise, research, and solutions dedicated to protecting what truly matters, with more than 100 patents to its name.

The Centenary campaign, Opening the next 100, encapsulates the vision that has guided CISA throughout its first century: continuous innovation, deep technical know-how, and a shared path with professionals, partners, and end-users toward the next generation of security.

This anniversary represents a moment of continuity for CISA—linking its heritage to a clear commitment to developing solutions capable of responding to the evolving dynamics of society, living, and working environments.

Opening the next 100 is not simply a tagline, but a statement of intent: to continue shaping the future of security through innovation, technical expertise, and collaboration across the entire value chain.

For 100 years, CISA has protected homes, workplaces, and public buildings, turning complex needs into reliable and intelligent solutions. Today, this legacy becomes the foundation for opening a new chapter in its journey.

Welcome to the future of security.

Welcome to the next 100 years of CISA.
